Leadership and training development

Presented by Dr Dan Riddle PhD (Psychology)

Performance Development

Sonographers are often called upon to mentor or train students in their workplace. Designed specifically with the sonographic workplace in mind, the skills needed to undertake an effective leadership and training role are at the core of the course.

The ASA Masterclass is an interactive, day-long seminar comprising discussions, self-appraisal and skills practice exercises. The course content is designed to stimulate thinking and expand the supervisory skills of sonographers.

Key outcomes:

- Identify internal and external barriers and enablers that impact on coaching and student learning
- Gain a better understanding of the skills and attitudes of being an effective 'coach' and delivering meaningful feedback
- Be able to recognise the differences and similarities between training, supervision, coaching and mentoring
- Gain skills and techniques for giving feedback and dealing with performance that is not meeting professional standards.

About the presenter

Dan has over 20 years experience supporting, coaching, mentoring and training individuals. He has a professional doctorate in psychology, having previously worked as a registered nurse in cardiac intensive care, oncology and neurology/neurosurgery.

Dan's background ensures he understands the clinical environment in a range of medical and allied health providers, including the importance of sonography and other imaging diagnostic assessments used in modern hospitals.

Providing group training and individual executive coaching to develop the skills of managers and supervisors across a wide variety of business sectors means Dan is ideally placed to relate these skills to a clinical environment.
